Car seat belt protection

Clippasafe Bump Belt

This product is designed for pregnant women, but may it may also be useful for people with a urostomy. The Bump Belt's seat pad fastens the vehicle seat belt as normal, ensuring that the lap portion could possibly be positioned away from the stoma (depending on location). The Bump Belt's elasticated flaps are then simply secured over the lap portion of the seatbelt.

Clothing, lingerie and swimwear

We are often asked where people can purchase clothing, such as underwear and high-waisted trousers. Most people with a urostomy can wear whatever they wish, but some people may find trousers with a high waist more comfortable, for example.

Please remember that the Urostomy Association does not recommend individual companies or products, and inclusion in this list does imply an endorsement from us.

Mattress protection

We are often asked how to protect mattresses against night-time leaks. We cannot recommend individual companies or their products, but you may find the following selection useful.

- Many high street stores sell waterproof mattress covers (eg John Lewis, and The Range) in all bed sizes. Do ensure that the description contains the word 'waterproof', as some are protection against dirt/dust mites, etc, but are not waterproof.
- If you use a dispensing appliance contractor (DAC) to deliver your medical equipment, it is worth contacting them, as some do supply waterproof pads.
- Age UK has a selection of bed pads, duvet and mattress protectors, bed-wetting alarms and mattress cleaning accessories.

About the Urostomy Association

This leaflet is just one in a series. You can see the full list on our website in the resources section. There you can also find our blogs, videos and webinars.

We know that sometimes you just want to talk things over, so we have specially trained buddies who have had their own urinary diversions and are happy to help. There is also a private Facebook group where you can ask questions and share your experiences with other people living with a urinary diversion.

We're also here to raise awareness of all matters around urinary diversions, and we run campaigns and appeals, liaising with like-minded organisations, policy makers and health professionals. Our aim is to build a supportive community around your needs.

Please remember that this leaflet is for information only, and you should contact your own stoma nurse about questions relating to your own care.

Lastly, we can only continue to support members of our community live their best lives, before and after surgery, thanks to charitable support.

Kind donations enable us to run our helpline and keep members up to date through our regular magazine, e-newsletters, group meetings, social media and fact sheets. Thanks to donors, we can inform and support stoma care professionals, increase awareness across healthcare and the general public, and influence urostomy policy and practice.

All of this, and much more, is possible because people choose to donate, fundraise and say thank you to our charity. If you would like to make a donation or support us in other ways, please visit our website at urostomyassociation.org.uk.
